Hard at work

The seniors of Wilmington High School endured a grueling day Saturday, raising money for their class treasury, the Shriners Burns Center and the Jimmy Fund. From 8 a.m. to 6 p.m., they sat in their rocking chairs and rocked, with a five minute break every hour. Gayle Elliott and Nancy Stone made themselves quite comfortable, and shared a pillow.

'In-Betweeners' for young adults

A new group has formed to serve as an outlet for the social needs of young adults. Designed to allow young people to meet their friends in an atmosphere of fun and relaxation, the group has taken on the name "The In-Betweeners."

The group was formed through the initiative and drive of some young people who have heard a number of complaints of there being nothing to do, for a person who has finished high school. The group has started under the auspices of St. Thomas Church, but is by no means restricted to persons active in that church.

The group is addressed to people who graduated from Wilmington High School between 1969 and 1979. Wives, husbands, girl friends, boy friends and just friends are also encouraged to participate.

The group will soon hold its second activity, a Christmas dance. It will be on Sat., Dec. 22 from 8 to 12 p.m. at Villanova Hall. Disc Jockey Harry McCarthy of WVEF will be featured at the dance. The cover charge is $2. Beer and wine will be served, and proper dress is required. Tickets may be purchased from 8:15 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. any Sunday at St. Thomas Church. They are also available from Jim Profirio, 470-0689, Donna Wayman, 658-6416, or Barbara Reinhardt, 658-5375.

Town Hall Annex finally moves

After a delay of several weeks, the Wilmington Town Hall Annex has finally moved to the Whitefield School.

The delay was caused by the need for telephone service. The telephone company was unable to provide multi-line service without extensive work. "Most of the records are down there, and we're still here," said one employee last week, before the actual move took place. For several weeks, the building inspector, the wire and gas inspectors, and the public health director were in one building, and their records in another.

The telephone hookup was completed over the weekend, and the move was completed on Monday.

Winter concerts in schools

Many people call it the best show in town. The winter concerts of the Wilmington Public Schools Music Department will be presented this week and next.

On Wednesday, Dec. 5, the combined West and North Intermediate School Bands, Strings and Choruses will play in concert.

The elementary schools concert will be on Wed., Dec. 12. It will include music by the Elementary Schools Concert Band, the Elementary String Orchestra, and the Senior String Orchestra.

The High School program will be presented on Thurs., Dec. 13. Taking part will be the High School Concert Choir, the Senior String Orchestra, and the High School Concert Band.

All three programs will be presented in the Herbert C. Barrows Auditorium at Wilmington High School, beginning at 7:30 p.m.

Admission for the elementary and intermediate concerts is fifty cents. For the High School concert, the admission is $1.50.

Anniversary Ball Jan. 12

The 250th Anniversary Committee of the Town of Wilmington has planned a celebration that will last from January to September next year.

The first event of the celebration will be a 250th Anniversary Ball, to be held on January 12 at the Aleppo Temple on Fordham Road.

Many local, county and state dignitaries are expected to attend. The entertainment for the evening will be an 18-piece band.

Tickets for the event are $12.50, and are now available from members of the committee. Posters advertising the event are on display in prominent places around town, and a coupon attached to the poster can be used to order tickets by mail.

A roast beef dinner will be served, preceded by a cocktail hour from 6 to 7 p.m. Dinner is at 7:30, and dancing will last until midnight.

Pole downed

A Billerica man, Gregory Juwa of 4 Coral Ave., received minor injuries when his 1979 Buick struck a pole on Shawshaven Avenue in Wilmington, shortly after 1 a.m. on Wednesday. Officer Chris Neville issued a citation for failure to keep to the right.

His name is Apcowak

Dave Boeri is back in town, with an Eskimo name, Apcowak.

Apcowak, for those who do not speak the Yupik language of the Eskimos, means "One who asks questions." For those people of Wilmington who knew Dave Boeri during the early 1960s, it is an appropriate name.

Dave, who was a member of the WHS Class of 1967, was the sort of live wire who was always sparking. One memory of Dave goes back to about 1966, when he led his class in some sort of prank or adventure which started outside of Weinberg's store, and marched up Middlesex Avenue to the high school. Dave was the guy with the baton, so to speak - the high school student who was herding the rest into line.

After he graduated from college, Dave went off-shore fishing. He worked on fishing boats that shoved off from Fish Pier in Boston and went out to Georges Bank to catch flounder and cod.

There were many. The Russians and the Poles and other nations were sending modern draggers over to Georges Bank, and deep-freezing the catch to take home. Seamen told stories of hundreds of fishing boats on Georges Bank, with hardly any being US flag.

Dave came home and wrote a book about it. He called it Tell It Goodly, Kiddo.

Unconsciously or consciously, it was telling the fact that the fishing industry in the United States was dead.

Partly as a result of his writing that book, Dave was called to Washington DC to testify on the state of the fishing industry, before a Congressional Committee. Partly as a result of that testimony, Congress passed the 200 mile law, which restricts foreign flag fishing vessels from fishing within 200 miles of the U.S. coast.

Then, as far as this paper is concerned, Dave disappeared. That was about four years ago. His mother and dad continue to live on Lloyd Road, Wilmington, but Dave just wasn't around.

Last week he turned up at the Rotary Club of Wilmington. He was the speaker of the day. He was just as exuberant as ever.

Dave has been living in Alaska for a couple of years. He has lived in one place where there is 13 feet of rain every year. He has lived at Point Barrow, which is the northern point of the United States, where all the oil wells are today. He has been an on-and-off resident of St. Lawrence Island, which is half way between Alaska and the Eastern Maritime Province of Soviet Russia, in the Bering Sea.

Dave is going back to St. Lawrence Island pretty soon. He intends to spend the winter there. He has some good Eskimo friends who are waiting for his return.

One couple are named Sook and Silook. They live in a small gable type house, in Gambie, which is a small village on a spit of land in the North Bering Sea. It is believed by anthropologists to be one of the oldest continuing places of habitation in the Western hemisphere.

Sook is also called Charlene. Silook has the Christian name of Paul. Dave lived with them during the whale hunting season, for two years.

That's why Dave is back in the eastern United States. He has come back to talk with a publisher in New York about printing a book on modern day whaling around Alaska.

There are about 2,000 bowhead whales left in this world today. Dave has watched the Eskimos hunt the bowhead, which is also called the "right whale" - meaning it was the whale that the Nantucket whalers hunted. The bowhead would float after being killed. Others sank. If a whaler hit a bowhead, he had hit the "right" whale, in his own jargon.

Dave has taken pictures - they are now color slides, of the whale hunting operations of the Eskimos. The pictures are fantastic. Some were taken with the temperature hovering at 20 degrees below zero.

It was some of those pictures that the rotarians of Wilmington viewed on November 28.

Art show

Mrs. Herbert Feilding points out a painting to Eileen O'Leary during the art show of the employees of the Wilmington Public Schools, held last weekend at the Wilmington Memorial Library.

An old fashioned Christmas at Harnden Tavern

The Friends of the Harnden Tavern will hold their Fourth Annual Old Fashioned Christmas celebration at the Harnden Tavern Sunday, between 1 and 4 p.m.

Festive activities included in the celebration will be a Children's Room, an Old Time General Store featuring foods and unusual crafts, background music by Beverly and Twig and refreshments including a wassail bowl. A contribution of $1.00 for adults and .50 for children will help the Friends buy furnishings and other necessities for the Tavern.

Originally built in 1770, the Tavern represents one of the finest examples of Georgian architecture in the area. Acquired by the Town of Wilmington with an overwhelming vote of a Special Town Meeting on June 25, 1973 under the authority of the Historic Eminent Domain Act of 1972, the building is presently listed in the National Register of Historic Buildings.

The purpose of the Friends is to raise funds in order to acquire furnishings and artifacts to enhance the educational and historical value of the Tavern and to disseminate information in cooperation with the Historical Commission. Yearly dues are minimal to encourage membership; $1.00 for students and senior citizens; $2.00 for individuals and $5.00 for a family membership which can be sent to Mrs. H. Tuttle, 2 Carnon Avenue, Wilmington or taken to the celebration.

Residents of the area can demonstrate their support of this historical structure by participating in the celebration at the Tavern, 430 Salem Street (Rte. 62), Wilmington on Sunday, between 1 and 4 p.m.

Two solar systems - 250 years apart

There are two buildings on Main Street, at the Tewksbury-Wilmington line. In distance they are about 250 feet apart. In age, too, they are about 250 years apart.

Both face south, exactly. In each case, the builder intended to get all the heat and light possible, from the sun.

Back in 1720 the Deacon James Thompson house was built "square to the universe." Now, in 1979, the Dr. Larry Richard Veterinary Hospital is being built "square to the universe." That means it faces due south.

Deacon Thompson was the Deacon of the Woburn Church of Christ. In later years it was termed the Woburn Congregational Church. He made it a point of honor to arrive at church, eight miles away from home, one hour before the minister, every Sunday morning, winter and summer.

Across the town line, in Tewksbury, the new building is employing the same thinking, but in a more modern way, than that used in the home of

The new veterinary hospital, being built on the Tewksbury-Wilmington line. It is planned to absorb all possible heat from the winter sun.

Deacon Thompson.

Larry Richard has the roof of his animal hospital slanted so as to get the most from the winter sun. He has also insulated the foundation, under the building. No heat is going to escape, if Dr. Richard can prevent it.

At the time of the winter solstice, when the sun is at its most southerly point in the year, it is described as being 23 and one half degrees south. The Thompson home, and the new animal hospital are at 42 and a half degrees North.

Add those two figures together, and use a little plane geometry. It will be seen that a figure of 25 degrees from the vertical would mean that the roof of the new building will be just about at right angles to the sun when it is at the winter solstice, just about Christmas time.

Perhaps the angle is a little more than 25 degrees. Possibly it is as much as 30.

If the angle is 30, then the sun will be at right angles in January, after the winter solstice, when the sun is "returning" and the winter cold is at its most extreme point. An angle of 30 degrees would be better, from a point of view of collecting heat.

Deacon James Thompson's home was built to get all possible heat from the sun, back in 1720. Now, with modern science behind it, a new building is being erected with exactly the same idea in mind.

Dr. Larry Richard, too, wants to get all the heat and light he can from the winter sun, just as did Deacon James Thompson.

letters to the editor

Dear Larz:

This is an open letter that has been sent to all school committee members, town officials, and members of the police department, from concerned parents of the Glen Road School children.

What must we do to enforce security at our school?

As you may recall, last year, our school suffered severe damage due to a fire, during a school vacation. Vandalism has occurred, and on the day following our school's Holiday Fair, the school was burglarized. We are tired of broken windows and broken beer bottles all over our children's playground. This shattered glass is a potential danger to our children.

Haven't our children suffered long enough? Must they suffer more? What must be done to enforce security for our school? Are neighborhood calls to the police department reporting unusual activity around the school heeded?

Fortunately, there was little loss, and minor damage done to our school during the last burglary, but what about the next time?

Will our taxes be raised to cover losses incurred as a result of the situation which presently exists? What must be done to enforce security for our school?

We, as concerned parents, demand the security and protection for our school to which we are entitled.

The Glen Road School
Parents' Advisory Council

Dear Larz:

The Glen Road School has been violated repeatedly, not only by vandalism, but also a very costly fire. Costly, educationally, to the students who were bussed, "doubled-sessioned," and subsequently housed in three schools in one year; costly, financially, to you, the people of this town who ultimately paid the bills for extra transportation, rent, salaries, repairs and replacement of lost and damaged equipment.

Parents in the Glen Road District were assured that the school would be adequately protected, with whatever methods were necessary, to prevent any further violation of this school. The recent break-in at the school raises the following questions. Were methods implemented to protect this school? Did the security procedure fail? Last, but not least, was the assurance of adequate protection simply rhetoric to appease concerned parents and taxpayers?

Sincerely yours,
M.D. Husen

You are allowed to drive at 16. You may get a job at 16. You will be tried in a court of law as an adult at 17. You are able to procreate and may marry at 18.

These are sobering thoughts because these same activities carry responsibilities - to yourself and to your community.

The generation raised on Sesame Street is one of the smartest yet, but without self-discipline they may come to naught!

Responsible people do not use drugs, do not get drunk, do not steal, do not vandalize, do not litter. Self-discipline makes one a greater person. It leads to self-reliance, and that's a New England tradition.

What kind of mentality expects a community to provide movies as an answer to spending time? (There's hardly been a movie in years worth either time or money)

"Nothing to do?" Homework every school night. Even a part-time job. Volunteering.

Hobbies and sports weekends. Bowling, tennis, baseball, football, basketball, bicycling, skating... Or learn to cook, or to play bridge, chess, backgammon.

Find your own individual talents before it is too late to develop them.

(Parents, whatever happened to "If it isn't your's, don't touch it" training? (Schools, why are these kids loitering around the common during school hours?)

(The wacky 'open campus' is defunct as workable at this age). If there aren't enough subjects taught to fill their short day, give them practical assignments so they learn to read and write and figure, such as filling out a job application; planning a trip using bus and train and plane schedules, to listing the packing of a suitcase suitably, computing amount of travelers' cheques needed for meals, fares, hotels, etc; learn research skills, precise and report writing; how to repair a car and other everyday practicalities.

Stop 'babysitting' and 'delinquents' may be good citizens instead. "The devil finds work for idle hands" has a lot of truth in it, especially for teens; you could spend every waking hour cleaning up litter instead of making it! A person who makes weak excuses for crime has no character, a person who can only think of movies has no personality of his own; You are the future of this country and the world - when are you going to start being responsible and prepare yourself to do a good job of it? Tell not what your town should do for you: Ask what you can do for your town - and your own personal future!

Christmas Fairs

Three fairs in Tewksbury Saturday offered folks a golden opportunity to actually have some great fun while maybe getting in some early Christmas shopping.

Some beautiful handcrafted clothes, as well as an abundance of good food, were available at the Congregational Church's annual fair, "The Treasures of Christmas."

The Shawshen School Christmas Bazaar was also a great affair for both kids and adults, especially when Bozo the Clown made an appearance.

Dr. Foster elected chairman of Brandeis University trustees

Dr. Henry L. Foster of Newton Centre, founder and president of the Charles River Breeding Laboratories of Wilmington, the world's leading producer of animals for medical and scientific research, has been elected chairman of the Brandeis University Board of Trustees, it was announced recently by Marver H. Bernstein, Brandeis University President.

Dr. Foster, a noted figure in the field of veterinary medicine and civic and philanthropic leader, succeeds film executive Robert S. Benjamin, who died October 22. He will complete the remaining seven months of Mr. Benjamin's term and then serve a full three-year term.

As chairman of the Board of Trustees, Dr. Foster will preside over the 50-member governing body of the University, which is responsible for overall University policy.

Dr. Foster's long association with Brandeis includes service as a President's Councilor and as a member of the Board of Fellows. He was named a Trustee in 1973 and was elected a vice chairman of the Board of Trustees in 1977.

The 54-year-old native of Boston has been an active supporter of the University, with special emphasis on its science programs. He and his wife Lois, a Fellow of the University, endowed the Henry and Lois Foster Biomedical Research Laboratories at Brandeis, which was opened in 1975. The $1.6 million facility provides the highly-controlled, disease-free environment for laboratory animals necessary to extend understanding in the life sciences. It houses and provides laboratory animals for the University's Rosenthal Basic Medical Sciences Research Center as well as the Brandeis biochemistry, biology and psychology departments at the graduate and undergraduate levels. The Foster Laboratories were designed to permit research in either a strictly controlled, germ-free environment with constant temperature and humidity, or in a so-called "dirty" environment, when such factors as bacteria, temperature and humidity will not affect research.

The Fosters' other major benefactions to Brandeis include the Henry and Lois Foster Fund and a Scholarship Endowment Fund. They also support the Louis Armstrong Scholarship Fund, the Compensatory Education Fund, and the Waltham Group, the University's student volunteer organization.

Dr. Foster earned his Doctor of Veterinary Medicine degree from Middlesex Veterinary College in 1946, on the campus, which, two years later, became the site of Brandeis University. He served for one year as senior veterinarian with the United States Relief and Rehabilitation Administration, (UNRRA) and, in 1947, founded the Charles River Breeding Laboratories.

The firm, devoted to the specialized breeding of laboratory animals for research, maintains facilities throughout the United States, in France, England, Italy and Canada.

The author of numerous articles in professional journals, Dr. Foster is a diplomate and past president of the American College of Laboratory Medicine. He also has served in many leadership capacities with the American Association of Laboratory Animal Science and is a past president of the Laboratory Animal Breeders Association. He is a member of numerous other professional organizations, the Society of American Bacteriologists, the New York Academy of Sciences and the European Society of Toxicology.

He has been a guest lecturer at the University of Massachusetts, University of California, Cornell University College and the University of Guelph, Ontario, Canada.

In 1976, he was awarded the Charles A. Griffin Award of the American Association for Laboratory Animal Science for "outstanding contribution in the field of laboratory animal science."

Dr. Foster is a trustee of the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston and with his wife established the Lois and Henry Foster Gallery for Contemporary Art at that institution.

Dr. Foster's other civic and educational activities include: member, Board of Overseers of Brandeis' Rosenthal Basic Medical Sciences Center; member, trustee chairman of the visiting committee, Department of Twentieth Century Art, Museum of Fine Arts, Boston; past president, Paul Harris Fellow and currently honorary member of Wilmington Rotary Club.

The Fosters are the parents of three sons, James, Neal and John, a '75 Brandeis graduate.

Wilmington police news

Activity for the week reflected the usual seasonal increase as more and more people are out on the roads.

There were 19 accidents reported along with nine larcenies and seven malicious damage incidents. Officers investigated 30 false burglar alarms and 13 disturbance complaints.

Ten fires were reported by officers or called in to the police desk. Alert residents reported suspicious activities on 11 occasions and officers were asked to quiet five domestic problems. Twelve arrests were made during the week and eight people were taken into protective custody. Two cars were stolen and wood-cutting complaints leveled off at four. Officers investigated two breaks and one assault and there were three complaints related to trail or minibikes disturbing the peace.

Tip of the week: A favorite game of some kids who live near the railroad tracks has been to cause the gates or lights to activate at nearby intersections. This can be a dangerous game now that the trains are again going to run through North Wilmington. Parents are cautioned to warn their children of the dangers.

Accidents
At 11:50 p.m. Monday, Officer Robert Vassallo, on his way to work was injured when he was involved in a head-on collision with a vehicle driven by Lorraine Miles of 58 McDonald Road.

Following investigation, Officer Venuti arrested Mrs. Miles for driving under the influence of liquor and endangering. The accident happened on a sharp curve of West Street.

A vehicle operated by Mary Medeiros of Kensington Drive, Billerica sustained extensive damage at 6 a.m. Tuesday when it struck a truck driven by Raymond Giguere of Walnut Street, Tewksbury. Giguere was attempting a left turn into Dunkin Donuts. Following his investigation, Officer Neville cited Giguere for having defective equipment.

Arrests

Redmen faithful hang tough as Aylward 'guarantees' a Super Bowl

by Rick Cooke

When I first heard that Bob Aylward planned to show the game films of the Tewksbury-Wilmington Turkey Day blowout at the Redmen Club banquet Thursday night I had visions of sado masochism creeping into the Redmen football scheme of things.

Or maybe the Tewksbury High School head football coach hoped that this would be the very last time he and the Redmen football faithful would ever have to watch a Wilmington football team squash Tewksbury's championship and Super Bowl hopes with a Thanksgiving rout.

I mean, two times in three years is just about all even the most faithful of football masochists can take, right? Well, I hope none of the many Tewksbury football parents, fans, players and coaches felt their respective stomachs turning after the fine meal Thursday. I doubt it because if they've proven anything over the past few seasons this lot has told the area that hope springs eternal as they keep coveting that post season berth in Boston.

Aylward, while saying that "he felt sorry for the seniors," told the gathering at the Elks Hall Thursday night that "we will be there (the Division II Super Bowl) guys, I guarantee it."

Strong words from a man who has seen his team's Super Bowl aspirations gunned down twice by Wilmington in the final game of the season with everything on the line.

Aylward has every right to feel confident, with his entire starting backfield returning next year, including super quarterback Dennis Vecchi.

He will have some big holes to fill however with all-MVC offensive linemen Bill Johnston (center-middle guard) and Bob Fraser (guard) graduating along with other All-Star selections Brian Foley (safety) and Dave Hanley (defensive back receiver-punter).

Tewksbury will also miss the leadership of co-captains Mark Riddle (second team All-MVC striker) and Mike Smith. The pair, despite being hampered for the entire season with a broken neck vertebrae and a gimpy knee respectively, provided the Redmen with the senior ringleaders that Aylward has always felt are so important to the success of any team.

"Our seniors weren't great athletes," Aylward said Thursday night. "We didn't necessarily have great senior talent, but we had good talent." Good enough to help Tewksbury to a solid 7-2-1 record when most experts were picking the club to win four - five games at the most this season.

"Without the leadership of the seniors we would have been 2-7-1 instead of 7-2-1," offered Aylward.

It is a tribute to the seniors on this TMHS team that they helped wipe out the memory of a 3-8-0 season a year ago - the first and so far only losing season in Aylward's six year tenure at Tewksbury.

Aylward, who spoke along with players Vecchi and Tom Horgan at the Tewksbury Pop Warner C team banquet the previous night, felt that the Wildcats played "their very best game of the season."

"It was like deja vu all over again. Wilmington was chosen as the number one team in the conference before the season and we knew that we had a battle on our hands," said Aylward.

The Tewksbury coach didn't come right out and say it and perhaps he didn't feel he had to. Although assistant coach Jerry Rideout said that the game film wasn't that bad, the WHS linemen, who had been coming on strong over the season's final three games after a slow start as a group, mauled the Redmen and took control of both lines of scrimmage.

But hope springs eternal with Aylward. And if you think the preceding phrase is trite try this Aylwardism on for size. "The great ones will survive - you can't fall into a sea of mediocrity."

You may think that to be rather trite and out of place after a team gets knocked on its behind, but if you know Bob Aylward - and Wilmington fans know him since he was an assistant football coach in town for several years, then you know that he honestly believes what so many wimps and genuine losers might call trite and corny.

Yes, Aylward and Tewksbury will keep plugging, keep working to reach what has become the brass ring for the town's football program from Pop Warner on up.

If any man can get them there Aylward can, simply because he is quite willing to keep himself and his team banging heads against that Thanksgiving morning wall until it finally falls.

Other banquet notes

Tewksbury High School Athletic Director Mickey Sullivan was on hand Thursday night and his opening remarks included: "I hope that all the underclassmen are looking forward to playing in a 14 team conference next year."

The MVC athletic directors are still in the process of formulating a schedule for next season. The TMHS football squad will be playing Lowell at Cawley Stadium in 1980.

Sullivan related an interesting quote from an MVC official at a recent meeting after that official had said that he didn't mind playing the smaller schools in the MVC.

"I don't mind playing the smaller schools in the league," said the official. When reminded that those smaller schools in the conference included Wilmington, Dracut and Tewksbury - three of the schools always tough in several sports - the official wondered aloud, "maybe it isn't the size of the school but the coaches and athletes..."

The word quality should have preceded coaches and athletes. School size may not be the overwhelming factor that many think it will be - at least in the initial stages of the 14 team conference.

Double duty for Rideout

Tewksbury assistant coach Jerry Rideout, who doubled as trainer for the team this season, had a rather tough double duty to say the least.

"I wasn't the trainer out of choice, but out of necessity," offered the Tewksbury defensive backfield coach. The Tewksbury school system does not have a full time trainer and has in the past had few if any applicants due to the low salary of the position.

So much of the burden of deciding which of the bumped and bruised should not play fell to Rideout. "We had injuries that put decisions on me that I wasn't really too happy to make," Rideout told the banquet gathering Thursday night.

Rideout was faced with helping to decide the game by game status of Riddle and Smith along with many other walking (or limping) wounded during the season.

Top flight guard

TMHS guard Ron Wallace, shown popping past Dick Danner during Monday's practice, is one of the reasons why the Redmen should hold their own on the hardwood in '79-80.

Frosh finished strong

The Tewksbury freshmen football team, under first year coach Joe DelGrosso, ended their season with a 4-5 record after blanking Wilmington, coached for the first year by Leo Campbell, 14-0.

Halfback Tony Masone ran for both touchdowns to up his season total to eight while quarterback Jeff Vecchi rounded out the game's scoring with a two point conversion pass.

Masone carried the ball 14 times for 87 yards with help from running mates Jerry Giordano (six-42) and Tony Rubico (three-52) as the frosh launched their best ground game of the season.

Pat Tremlett and Dan Sitar had an interception apiece for Tewksbury with Charlie Healey, Mike Buscanera and Buddy Marion also playing well defensively for the winners.

Another sophomore, Frank Fay, had a concussion and was coughing blood late in the season, according to Rideout, and yet another gritty soph, linebacker Rick Bradanick, recovered quickly after being sidelined with a broken wrist early in the season.

Senior Dave Hanley, Tewksbury's jack-of-all-trades at the end of the season, punting and place kicking while also starting at defensive back and wide receiver, played the Turkey morning tilt with a sprained ankle "that looked like a fist in a sock," said Rideout.

And last, but not least on the Redmen injury list for 1979 was the poison ivy that Rideout said several players had "all over certain parts of their bodies."

Certainly a season laced with the unexpected.

Briggs cops

Walter T. Casey Memorial award
Wilmington High School senior running back-linebacker-kicker Chris Briggs was recently named by the WHS coaching staff as the winner of the 1979 Walter T. Casey Memorial Award as the football squad's outstanding player.

The award was presented to Briggs at the Thanksgiving night dance following the Wildcats 32-0 rout of Tewksbury. Chris, with his running, punting and solid play at linebacker, was instrumental in helping to ruin Tewksbury's shot at a Division II Super Bowl.

Junior defensive-offensive tackle Chris Nolan was selected as the Wildcats Unsung Hero for 1979. That award, funded by the Boosters Club, is an album of photos and press clippings to be presented to Chris at a later date.

Nolan was one of many Wildcat linemen who feasted on the Redmen November 22.

MVC football All-Stars

Tewksbury High School's football squad had three players named to the first team Merrimack Valley Conference All-Star squad this week and seven more to the second squad.

Actually junior Dennis Vecchi was named to both the first and second squads, cracking the All-Star first lineup at safety and being named as the second team quarterback.

Redmen named to the first team were senior center Bill Johnston, senior guard Bob Fraser and Vecchi at safety where he led the team in interceptions with six, fumble recoveries (three), unassisted tackles and total defensive points. All this while doubling as one of the conference's top quarterbacks, finishing with 13 touchdown passes, good enough for second spot behind Wilmington's first team All-Star John Robarge who tossed 14 TD's.

Tewksbury players selected to the second team along with Vecchi were defensive back Brian Foley, senior wide receiver Dave Hanley, junior tight end Mike Prescott, and junior halfback Tom Horgan.

The Wilmington Wildcats, who ruined Tewksbury's Super Bowl hopes Thanksgiving morning, placed seniors Chris Briggs and Dave Woods on the first squad along with the other senior Robarge.

Briggs was selected as both a running back and a linebacker while Woods, the premier pass catcher in the conference, was named to a wide receiver slot.

Cracking the second team lineup for coach John Ritchie's Cats were Briggs as the kicker and junior Chris Nolan at a tackle.

Soccer All-Stars

Tewksbury senior soccer players Ron Wallace, Rick Catanzaro and Bob Dascoli were recently named to the MVC soccer All-Star team. It was the second year in succession that Wallace, a fullback, and Dascoli, a midfielder, were named to the squad. Dascoli was also selected as a Boston Globe All-Scholastic.

Wilmington Wildcats named to the MVC team were seniors Jim Burns and Mark Lanni. Lanni was also honored by a Boston Globe All-Scholastic selection.

Wilmington soccer banquet

Wilmington High School's soccer team recently held its banquet at the Sons of Italy hall where coach Bill Peabody announced that next year's tri-captains will be John Protopapas, John Gagnon and Kevin Reece.

The WHS senior soccer players all received Wildcat T-shirts, purchased like the other gifts presented at the banquet with funds raised by the parents through the sale of soda and baked goods at the WHS home games.

Peabody and first year assistant coach Dick Scanlon were also presented with gifts from the players in remembrance of Wilmington's super tourney qualifying season.

A group of senior girls who helped cheer the team on in its dramatic tourney qualifying win over Tewksbury in the last game of the season and in the first tourney win over Jamaica Plain were presented with roses by members of the squad. Other WHS soccer faithful deserving mention here are: Mr. and Mrs. Frank Lentine-Lentine, the first head coach of Wilmington High School soccer, had this year's seniors as freshmen during his last season at the helm.

Chris DeCecca Jr., a former member of the WHS soccer team who distinguished himself as a standout soccer player at Southeastern Mass. University, returned to help the team over some rough spots during the course of the season.

Lynn Hagen and Murial Diaz - assisted the team as score keeper and timer throughout the season.

Peabody would like to thank all the parents who helped make the banquet a success, including Chris DeCecca Sr. and Rico Catalano Sr. for their assistance at the Sons of Italy Hall.

The Sons of Italy annually donates the Most Valuable Player trophy and this year that award will be presented at the WHS sports banquet this spring.

New coaches take over

A pair of first year coaches have hit the local varsity sports scene.

Wilmington High School's basketball fortunes will be directed by local leader Jim Tildale, who was an assistant basketball coach with a strong Methuen High team a year ago.

The 27-year-old Tildale, an assistant varsity football coach at WHS and a graduate of North Adams State College, takes over for Don Doucette who took the reigns from Bob Milley a year ago.

Jim will be minus 6-5 tree Dick Dowd in the middle, but the scrappy Cats have seen their hoop fortunes take a turn for the better over the past couple of seasons and the new mentor will be looking to continue that rise toward respectability. Tildale's assistant coach will be Doug Anderson.

Tewksbury High School will have a new varsity winter track coach as long time junior high school track enthusiast and coach Dennis McGadden takes over.

McGadden is waging a rather unusual but spirited campaign to get some of the top TMHS athletes out for his team, posting mimeographed messages like this around the high school; "Do you like running around in lots of silly circles, being chased or chasing after other silly boys who like circles?"

"Do you like pain and sweat all over your body and a wish to be remembered as that nice kid who liked circles?"

Under the subhead 'fame' on the mimeographed sheet; "Being able to look back into your high school year book and saying - what the hell was I doing, I must have been nuts!"

And under Dreams - "To want to kill your very own coach - to be a hero - to know that your coach will take all the credit - to know you, the one who did, was important"

"How about it, want the job?"

Well, McGadden, who is not an English teacher but a history instructor at the junior high school, is at least innovative and trying a different tactic in getting boys out for the squad.

TMHS gets a trainer

Tewksbury High School graduate Kathleen Boyd was named by the school committee as a part time athletic trainer last week. Kathy, who has her masters in sports medicine from Southern Illinois University, has passed the national trainer's exam and worked as a trainer at North Adams State College before coming to Tewksbury.

Kathleen has also worked as a physical therapist at Tewksbury State Hospital.

Gagnon earns letter

Wilmington's Anne Gagnon has recently received her varsity field hockey letter at Maine's Bowdoin College.

"The Almanac"

By WILLIAM PACINO

Is your life governed by astrological calculations? Does the weather worry you? When should you plant your favorite vegetables?

Did you know that the Earth will be at Perihelion on January 3, 1980 when it will be 91.4 million miles from the Sun or that the Earth will be at Aphelion on July 5, 1980 when it will be 94.5 million miles from the Sun?

All the answers of your life as well as a few odd and sundry tidbits thrown in are just waiting for you in the latest issue (1980) of the "Old Farmer's Almanac."

The "Almanac" was founded in 1792 and has never ceased its pursuit of taking care and predicting all that can happen out-of-doors.

The "Almanac" is an indispensable tool that charts a great deal of information available nowhere else. And in these days of homogenized news and government weather forecasts, it presents an amusing and delightful alternative to all the slickness.

The first part of this informative journal breaks down, by months, the past history of key events contributing to certain patterns or superstitions, as well as the future which holds prime importance to a farmer or an amateur trying to start the greenery growing.

Tides, sunrises, sunsets are all presented by these early-in-the-journal tables as seen in the illustration.

After a run-through of the year — starting in November 1979 and running through December 1980, the "Almanac" presents an excellent chart, the rival of the one on Burpee's seed packets, detailing the appropriate times for planting outdoor vegetables as well as an ancient set of guidelines which involve the moon's place in the Zodiac when it comes to the various phases of gardening.

When the moon is in: Aries — cultivating, plowing, tilling are favorable. Taurus — potatoes, root crops, lettuce, cabbage. Gemini — weeding, cultivating, destroying growths. Cancer — best sign for all planting and irrigating. Leo — use only for killing weeds. Virgo — good for cultivation. Libra — planting flowers, seeding hay and livestock feed. Scorpio — very productive, for all planting, especially vines. Sagittarius — cultivation, planting onions, seeding hay. Capricorn — potatoes, tubers, root crops. Aquarius — weeding, destroying pests. Pisces — highly productive, especially for root growings.

Mixed into the potpourri of information is a variety of articles — some touching, some amusing, some a gardening primer for those who have not bought Jim Crockett's books.

The 1980 issue of the "Almanac" includes "Growing Vegetables in Small Places" by Helen Tower Brunet, as well as a superlative article on a coast-to-coast 3,433 mile marathon run in 1928 worth $25,000 in first prize money, something that has been all but forgotten even in this year of the jogger.

The forecast for December 1979 as well as every other month follows next in sequence. December in New England will be (You will have to buy the "Almanac" to get other months and other zones): Temp. 31.5 degrees (1.5 degrees below ave.) Precip. 7.5" (2.5" below ave.) Dec. 1-5 Sunny and cold, showers and snow. 6-10 Rain, heavy snow nother. 20-25, then light snow and sleet. 26-27 Clear and mild. 28-30 Cold, 1" — 3" snow.

The "Almanac" also lists the best fishing days for 1980, wind chill and wind barometer tables and also the time of killing frosts and growing seasons for cities throughout the U.S.

The idea behind the "Old Farmer's Almanac" was just what the title says. Inform the farmer of all that is important to his livelihood. But the facets of this journal, published by Yankee, Inc. of Dublin, N.H., go beyond value only to a farmer.

Weather, tides, gardening periods are equally important to the non-farmer who must battle the same elements as the farmer to get to work on a fall or winter morning or who has interest in planting a small backyard vegetable garden.

And the Almanac is fun besides. During certain reading times, like when you are sick or on a rainy, glooming day, such stories as the "Yankee Leaper", Sam Patch in 1830, the tidbits of "How happy is a clam?", the word games and puzzles and the typically Yankee, very dry humor "Anecdotes and Pleasantries" column make this journal both a good bedside companion as well as a source of valuable information.

A final story to bring out the richness of the "Old Farmer's Almanac", courtesy of the "Almanac" itself.

"A hiking tourist comes upon a native carrying a jug in one hand and a 'rifle-gun' in the other.

The native, handing the jug to the outlander, said "Hold this" then he pointed his gun at the startled man saying, "Now ye take a drink!" Frightened out of his wits, the visitor pulled the stopper from the jug and took his swig. His eyes watered and he sputtered and choked. The native reached for the unstopped jug and handed the gun to the newcomer. "Now mister, ye hold the gun on me while I take a drink."

When you want to sample a piece of New England, pick up the treasure known as "Old Farmer's Almanac".

Thanksgiving leftovers

By DAN FERULLO

Thanksgiving dinner was finished, the discussion over the Woburn-Winchester football game finally was ended, the relatives and friends were gone, and all that leftover food was just sitting there, in the middle of the table, some half-eaten, with dirty forks and knives plunked conspicuously in the center of heaps of mashed potatoes, squash and all kinds of pies, and some never even touched, such as all that pastry and a big bowl of rice pudding. My wife Diane was out on the porch, sending off her mother and father, the first and last visitors of the day, while I sat at the table, contemplating whether I should take a sip of what was left of a forty-five-minute-old glass of beer or start cleaning up the mess. I opted for the beer, as a way of avoiding the inevitable, even though I knew it would be just another minute or so of stalling, then grimaced at its flat, warm taste. Even holding the glass, crusted on the inside with blotches of dried foam and smeared with turkey-greased fingerprints on the outside, had become repulsive, and I longed to toss it along with the rest of the dirty dishes into the sink all at once and forget about them until tomorrow, or until Diane got around to doing them, which would probably be as soon as she got back into the kitchen, if I knew my wife.

By the time she reappeared, the cherubic countenance she had kept up during all the hectic activities of the day had been replaced by a worn-out-looking frown, and I had progressed to the point where I just wanted to chuck the whole mess into the garbage and retire to the living room to watch the last two minutes, which inevitably stretch to thirty, of the second Thanksgiving Day NFL football game. I think my wife knew this, and feeling perhaps I deserved just one extra break, she silently went about picking up one dish after another, carefully placing the leftovers into fresh dishes or those plastic storage containers and wrapping them tightly with tin foil and putting them into the refrigerator, and equally carefully soaking the dirty dishes in hot, soapy water that smelled of lemon-fresh Joy. I yawned and moaned and stretched in my usual post-big meal fashion to indicate the couch was waiting, but I think watching Diane do all that work made me feel guilty — I say think because I'm not sure; it may have given me a sudden bout of indigestion — and I was unable to budge myself from my chair.

There were five pies on the table: one pumpkin, half of which we had successfully shipped off with her parents; one custard, half of which was eaten; one apple, which was never even sliced; one squash, never touched; and one rice pudding, with a small chunk missing. And they were just the beginning; after giving away what must have been at least one third of everything else on the table (we were unsuccessful at getting my parents to take some stuff off to our friends, there were still enough leftovers to feed six people for three days. Only in America, I thought, recalling an old adage, do you see so much leftover food and waste after an enormous

FM TALK: O.J. Simpson, in an SI interview, on what really counts in sports "Fame is a vapor, popularity is an accident, and money takes wings. The only thing that endures is character." If anybody deserves the abbreviated boxscore name "Bleep", it's Bill Lee. According to "Manwatchers", 67 percent of their organization like men with hair on their chests. Mmmm...Some baseball trivia: George Brett, of the Kansas City Royals, hit two hundred and twelve hits this summer. Now this doesn't sound very much like trivia to you, right? Except that Brett's two hundred and twelve hits included twenty-three home runs, forty-two doubles, and twenty triples. And what makes this even more impressive is that the last American League player to hit at least twenty doubles, twenty triples, and twenty homers in one season was Jeff Heath, who accomplished it thirty-eight seasons ago; the last National Leaguer, by the way, was Willie Mays in '57.

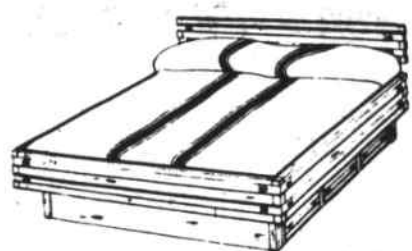

Some more interesting stuff on baseball: The combined salaries of the entire Oakland Athletics baseball team last year totaled just $900,000, a mere few dollars more than what the Red Sox are paying for just Jim Rice...It is understandable why the Athletics are the lowest paid team in professional baseball, when you look at their attendance record: they drew barely 300,000 fans at home this season...In the National League, the Mets didn't fare much better; they drew only 788,905 fans, down, incidentally, from 2.7 million in 1970...Overall, however, most of the other teams in both leagues did better: both leagues together drew forty-three and a half million fans, an increase of nearly three million over 1978, and, as you might expect, an all-time record.

It would be difficult to deny that Erma Bombeck is one of the country's most

Home buying activity remains very resilient

Escalating mortgage interest rates and tighter credit have not yet had a substantial impact on the rate of homebuying activity, Dr. Jack Carlson, executive vice president and chief economist of the National Association of Realtors, said today. He added, however, that a dampening of demand is inevitable. "Preliminary estimates for October," Carlson said, "indicate resale activity was at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 3.9 million units, only slightly less than the rate of 4.01 million transactions reported in September."

Overall, he noted, on a seasonally adjusted basis, October sales were the second best for any month in 1979 and so far this year sales have averaged 3.75 million units compared with 3.92 million units in the corresponding period a year ago, a decline of 4 percent.

The estimates are based on reports from 100 to 142 Multiple Listing Services across the country who report resale activity to the association each month.

"Resale activity in October was particularly strong in the Northeast and West and held steady in the South," Carlson said. "The North Central region was the only section of the country in which sales declined after the imposition of tight credit controls on October 6 by the Federal Reserve Board."

Carlson said this, in part, reflects the impact of usury laws in several of the states in the North Central region.

"The continued strength of the resale market," he said, "reflects the needs and desires of Americans to move and improve their housing. Only a very small proportion of home sales can be attributed to speculation and nearly all October purchases were made for owner occupancy."

Carlson sounded a note of caution, saying that despite the relatively strong sales activity, record high interest rates and a growing scarcity of mortgage funds are expected to dampen resale activity to an annual rate of 3.5 million units during the next six months. He said he expects the recovery in resale activity to begin in the spring and summer of 1980.

The National Association of Realtors represents more than 740,000 individuals involved in all phases of the real estate industry.

Thanksgiving leftovers

feast. Only in America, I thought, creating a new one, does someone buy a twenty-pound turkey to feed four people.

"What, pray tell, are we going to do with all these leftovers?" I wondered aloud.

Diane stopped folding a sheet of Reynolds Wrap over an emptied and practically untouched second can of cranberry sauce just long enough to inspect the scene with a quick glimpse, then resumed what she was doing. "Have you ever seen so much uneaten food?" she said, matter-of-factly, seemingly unphased by the tasks at hand.

"I'm not trying to make small conversation. How are we going to get rid of all this stuff?"

"The fruits and nuts we'll just leave out. The rest will get eaten I'm sure."

At least the food she was planning on leaving out was pretty to look at: all those bright-colored pieces of fruit, which I must admit also add pleasant smells to our house during the nippy fall season, and all those earthy-looking nuts. They would stick around for maybe two weeks, at the most, but the rest of the food had to be eaten soon, or it would go bad. I finally got my butt up off my chair and transported it to the couch, just in time to catch the final score and credits of the football game and situate myself comfortably for the opening face-off between the Bruins and the lowly Nordiques. By the end of the first period, I had switched the channel and Diane had completed her chores and had plunked herself down beside me.

I told her, "You look tired. Why don't you go to bed?"

"So do you, and no, I think I'll watch some tv."

"Me too."

By 8:30 I was out of this world, and I never knew what my wife did the rest of the evening.

I had a recurring nightmare, and it went something like this: There was a feast, with a huge stuffed turkey, basted and cooked until it was golden brown, and three different kinds of vegetables and mashed potatoes and yams and cranberry sauce and custard pie topped with vanilla ice cream and...I just kept going back for seconds and thirds and fourths. Only not willingly. Every time I finished one plate, an enormous bird would shove another plateful in front of me and make me eat it. And when I got to the point where I wouldn't take another portion, Big Bird held me and jammed the food down my throat. When I started squirming and trying to spit the food out, Big Bird let out a grisly cackle, and glaring at me with his massive beak just inches from my face, he held my mouth and jaw with his vice-like claws and worked them manually until each morsel of food inside was ground to pieces and had to be swallowed. I was going to eat that stuff no matter what, until I burst like a balloon filled with too much water. I finally gave in. Big Bird watched as I took each bite, until my jaws were so stuffed that I thought I was going to choke, until the last tidbit was mashed and consumed, until the plate was clean. Then came portion number ten, and the force-feeding started all over again...

I woke up just before my stomach burst. It ached, only a little but enough to warrant a remedy. I rolled out of bed (had I been so tired that I couldn't recall getting off the couch, undressing, and going through my turn-of-the-lights-and-check-the-locks routine?) and ambled into the kitchen and opened the refrigerator. The tiny light revealed all that uneaten food again. I peered around and around, behind the partly mangled turkey, between the cream-cheese and celery sticks, next to the loaves of bread and packages of rolls, under the tray of — what on earth were those things? Oh, yes, I remember — pecan squares, from shelf to shelf, then sighed with relief: hidden behind the plastic container full of cold cuts (God knows why I bothered to buy them the week of Thanksgiving) was about a half-glass worth of 7-up in a green 2-liter plastic bottle, just enough, I hoped, to make me burp, if I guzzled it down fast. I wanted to belch more than anything in the world at that moment, and I think I would have killed for one good one.

Back to bed. This time when I fell to sleep there was no Big Bird: instead I drifted to never-never land in the arms of Jaclyn Smith and Cheryl Ladd. Oh, the wonders of carbonation! I got up the next morning feeling refreshed and yearning, like a true American, for something mouthwatering for breakfast, so I went to the frig and pulled out the partly-devoured turkey and scrounged around for any remnants of stuffing. When Diane saw what I was doing, she glared at me in wide-eyed disbelief. "Are you really eating that for breakfast?"

I felt like a cat caught with a mouthful of feathers. "There's nothing better than day-old turkey stuffing for breakfast."

She just shook her head disapprovingly and wandered off into the bathroom.

I located a nice chunk beneath the rear end of the breast bone and shoved it in my mouth, savoring every chew. "Look, at least you could have done as make me feel guilty about all these calories." No response. "Let's face it, there are those who like eggs at two o'clock in the morning, so why not those who like turkey stuffing other than on Thanksgiving?" Still nothing. I found another piece of stuffing and did it in. "Even if it is nine-thirty in the morning."

I finished off my last bite with a slice of Italian bread and a glass of milk, then returned the turkey to the cold, crowded top shelf where I had found it. "Get use to it," I whispered, "you're going to be there for a while."

I estimated that there had to be at least fourteen pounds of turkey leftover. By the time I retired that night, there were about eleven. Saturday morning there wasn't much stuffing left, but a few big slices of white meat sure tasted good while I watched the new adventures of Popeye (I can't believe that I still enjoy getting up on Saturday morning and turning on the tv, vaguely suspecting I might find something intellectual on but realizing better of it, then ending up a bit more delighted that all the stations are running animated features, therefore, having the ideal excuse to watch them). Before I could get the last shred of breast meat ingested, Diane was standing over me and looking down, only this time she was asking about the food shopping, a Saturday ritual in our house. "I guess you won't have to get too much this week." She paused. "What about dinner tomorrow?" She paused again, then answered her own question. "I guess there's plenty in the refrigerator for one more turkey dinner tomorrow."

I suddenly wondered why I had bothered to eat turkey breast for breakfast, when there was at least a dozen eggs sitting in the frig. That evening we ate cold turkey sandwiches for supper and later snacked on dark meat from the drumsticks. Frankly, it was getting to be awful, but I was determined to not waste so much as a single shred of meat. Three breakfasts, three lunches, three dinners (two small, one large), and countless snacks later, our leftover turkey was just about down to bare bones. And I hadn't been re-visited by Big Bird once in those nights — a miracle, considering the number of times I had indulged in turkey-based meals. I finished the last bit of dark meat after a ball game one night. Diane walked in on me just as I was sucking the last shred off the last leg bone. Before me sat the skeletal carriage of broken bones that contained only minuscule fragments of meat and skin.

"I can see you managed to finally finish the turkey," she said. Why does she always succeed in making me feel like a cat caught with feathers in its mouth? "By the way, your mother called and wanted to know what we were planning to have for Christmas dinner. We decided on turkey."

We...? I could see Big Bird staring down at me already. I wanted desperately to hear her say roast or ham or duck or anything. Anything but another turkey. I never said a word; instead I got up from the couch and went to the frig and hunted for any leftover 7-up or Sprite or ginger ale I could get my hands — and — mouth — on. I thought, only in America.

ROVING

popular and successful — and, alas, rich — newspaper columnists. But frankly, I think Erma is on the verge of pulling a Milton Berle: that is, she's about to over-expose herself to the American public to the point where they will get tired of reading about her husband's "holey" (notice an "e") socks and her son's ravenous appetite and her dog's nasty toilet habits and so on, and decide to bring back mass appeal for Sad Sack and Mamie Yokum. Erma is not only pushing out three columns a week, she's hawking one best-selling book after another, doing morning tv appearances on "Good Morning America," and creating a sitcom for ABC next fall. Whew! Oh, well, who am I to criticize? Maybe she's one step ahead of everybody and hoping that the public does tire of her. After, of course, she's made a bundle and can retire someplace to spend it.

Could it be that JWL's exquisite football reports in The New Yorker are really the work of none other than Roger Angell, who, by the way, had the most brilliant baseball story I've ever read in the last issue? His recollection and assessment of this past baseball season also includes a wonderful evaluation of the Boston Red Sox, plus some enlightening remarks by "Spaceman" Bill Lee. Writes Angell about his impression of the Sox following their demise to the Orioles during their final visit to Fenway in September: "I came to understand, at long last, that this famous local band of hitters and heroes — Fred and Jim and Yaz, Pudge and Butch and Dewey and the rest, most of them warriors of the marvelous 1975 World Series — had come to the end of the line. Probably they would be broken up — I suddenly hoped they would be — but in any case the team would be best left out of my expectations until someone in charge in Boston began to think about speed and defense and pitching, which are the quieter and more sustaining philosophies of the game." Says Lee: "There's nothing in the world like the fatalism of the Red Sox fans, which has been bred into them for generations by that little green ballpark, and by the Wall, and by a team that keeps trying to win by hitting everything out of sight and just outbombarading everyone else in the league...All this makes the Boston fans a little crazy. I'm sorry for them." You'll have to read The New Yorker to find out what else was said by Angell and Lee...Included in that great baseball piece is a quote by Ray Miller, the Baltimore Orioles pitching coach, on what makes their pitching so consistently outstanding. Take notice, "someone in charge in Boston".

Once a change in direction has begun, even though it's the wrong one, it still tends to clothe itself as thoroughly in the appearances of rightness as if it had been a natural all along — F. Scott Fitzgerald.

Make it a good one.

Traveling in Luxembourg and neighboring countries

By Al and Frances Sylvia

Part V in a series

At the Grand Ducal Golf Club, a favorite of former President Eisenhower, we were luncheon guests of one of the most interesting personalities we met during our visit, Burgermeister Madam Colette Flesch, Mayor of Luxembourg City.

A graduate of Wellesley College and the Fletcher School of Diplomacy, Mme. Flesch first was introduced to the United States as an exchange student in Springfield, Vermont. While in this country, she traveled extensively and still is in contact with many friends in our country. A career government worker and mayor for several terms, her sphere of influence and knowledge extends beyond the city to country and European affairs. She spoke briefly but emphasized the appreciation of her countrymen to the United States for twice liberating Luxembourg and said that her people will never forget this.

The luncheon was delicious as were all our meals in Luxembourg but the dessert was unique and worth mentioning. So beautiful was the pyramid of fresh pineapples encased in a web of spun sugar and decorated with flowers that it seemed a waste to dismantle it for eating.

American Embassy
James Gordon Lowenstein, the American Ambassador to Luxembourg, invited us to his residence at the embassy for breakfast on the patio overlooking the city. Not the flamboyant Perle Mesta type (former Luxembourg Ambassador and Washington society "hostess with the mostess") Lowenstein was a gracious host and chatted informally with us for an hour or more. The embassy is a distinguished old building furnished with many antiques and a surprising modern art collection, the personal selection of the ambassador.

The ambassador discussed the high standard of living of the Luxembourgers and we learned that except for the younger career type, married women do not work outside the home because they feel it gives the impression that their husbands cannot adequately support the family. Strangely enough in this beautiful, peaceful country we were told that there is a very high suicide rate.

Villeroy and Boch

Recently introduced in the Boston area are the stoneware, china and porcelain made by Villeroy and Boch of Luxembourg. Founded in 1767 when the country was part of the Austrian empire by the Boch brothers, their reputation for fine china of exceptional quality and beauty was quickly established. As the business expanded, Nicholas Villeroy, owner of a pottery, joined in partnership.

Continued expansion established factories in many parts of the world. We saw the entire process from the beginning with the imported raw materials such as clay and quartz, through the molding, glazing, firing and hand painting, to the finished product packaged for shipment. Their products are sold in over 70 countries world-wide and they have 18 factories employing 16,000 people.

The year 1953 saw the beginning of modernization with new techniques so that production capacity has increased 60 percent. Villeroy and Boch has become the first producer of householdware in the Benelux countries and one of the most important producers in Europe. Internationally known artists design the patterns and some hand painting still is being done, but most of the patterns are made by printed decals applied by hand.

Moselle Valley

A drive on the Road of Wine along the Moselle River valley, a popular camping area, brought us to the Caves of St. Martin built between 1919 and 1921 at Reflich. The caves, meaning cellar or vault, are hewn out of great rock extending some 65 feet below ground with a year round temperature of 55 degrees, ideally suited to wine making, storing and processing.

More than 1,000,000 bottles of St. Martin sparkling wines and Moselle wines made from the local vineyards are stocked in the wide galleries. We toured the cellars and sampled the products in the reception room to learn first hand about wines of the Moselle. Luxembourg wines are not widely exported with 55 percent kept for domestic consumption and most of the remaining exported to Belgium.

The country of Luxembourg is a stronghold of Roman Catholicism and the most important daily paper, the Luxembourg Wort, is a Catholic publication headed by a priest. It operated from a new ultra modern building with marble floors, hardly typical of the United States newspaper plants.

Luxembourg has a thriving iron industry which has been an important factor in the economic growth of the country. Always rich in iron ore but unsuitable for steel because of its high phosphorous content, it was not until 1877 when an English engineer Gilchrist Thomas invented a method of de-phosphorizing cast iron that this industry developed on a large scale. Luxembourg pays its steel workers more than any other country in Europe.

Luxembourgers enjoy a high standard of living. They are solidly independent, have their own franc, their own language and do not intend to let themselves be mistaken for an appendage to any other country.

Their love of beauty can be seen as one looks at the green landscape dotted with neatly kept homes, all with bright flower gardens filled with their specialty, roses. The windowboxes on their stucco houses are overflowing with geraniums and petunias. The Luxembourgers love music and there is a popular saying in Europe that if you have one Luxembourg, you will have a rose garden; if you have two Luxembourgers, you will have a kaffe klatch; and if you have three Luxembourgers, you will have a band.

The national motto of Luxembourg is "We want to remain what we are," and their strength lies in their will to do just that — remain simple farming and industrial people living close to the land. But because of their location and international connections, the Luxembourgers are cosmopolitan along with their simplicity.

For a side trip, we crossed the natural border from Luxembourg into Germany at the confluence of the Sure and Moselle Rivers with a mere formality at customs taken care of by our bus driver. We spent the day in Trier, the oldest town in Germany, named for the ancient tribe of Treviri who lived in the area at the time of the Celts. Founded in 15BC by Augustus, it was the capital of the old Roman Empire and the home of Emperor Constantine for 30 years. Located along the old Roman road, still in evidence are remains of Roman baths, an amphitheater and an ancient Roman gate called Porta Nigra, built at the end of the 2nd century, the largest gate to survive from Roman times.

Trier's Cathedral, damaged in the war and reconstructed during a twelve-year period, dates back to the 11th century and was built on the site of the ruins of old Roman buildings constructed centuries before. Next to it, is the 13th century Church of Our Lady, Germany's earliest Gothic church.

The largest building of antiquity that has survived intact is Constantine's Basilica dating back to 306, restored and now an Evangelical Lutheran Church. It was burned several times and damaged during the war which destroyed all the windows. They have been replaced by plain glass because of the expense of stained glass and seem very much out of place in this ancient edifice. Other churches in the area are St. Matthew's built in 1127 containing the apostle's grave, and St. Paulin, 17th century, one of the most magnificent specimens of German rococo.

Around these old ruins and ancient churches is a bustling city with modern stores, restaurants and a busy market place which is the Trier of today.

One of its most famous or infamous sons, depending on your political convictions, is Karl Marx who was born in Trier in a typical townhouse in 1818. The building is marked by a simple plaque with his name, birthdate and easily recognized profile. How far his influence has spread from this small ancient town!

The souvenir seller outside the Cathedral was eager to tell our group that he had been a prisoner of war in Stockton, California but had escaped from the POW camp to Mexico.

Trier and Luxembourg historically are connected because of a land exchange by Sigefroi in the first century to allow the monks from the abbey in Trier to take refuge in the fortress in Luxembourg in time of danger.

After the long day of sightseeing, we crossed the border again into Luxembourg and spent the last night of our too brief stay in this miniature land to leave the next morning for our last Benelux country, Belgium.

Porta Nigra (Black Gate) in Trier, Germany, the largest gate to survive from Roman times dates back to the 2nd century.

Be careful of the toys you buy!!

By Ward Morehouse III

A growing number of imported toys are creating new safety hazards for American children at a time when most toys manufactured in this country are getting high marks from the United States Consumer Products Safety Commission (CPSC).

The devaluation of the dollar and lack of proper inspection at manufacturing plants abroad are the primary reasons that unsafe pop guns, dart guns, and other "playthings" are penetrating US markets in greater numbers, US toy manufacturers and CPSC officials say.

At the same time, a spokesman for a major American toymaker, who requested that both his name and the name of his company be withheld, charges that CPSC toy safety inspectors tend to focus their efforts on nabbing "big name" toy dealers in this country for violations of safety standards, rather than going after the relatively anonymous makers of toys from Taiwan, Hong Kong, Korea, and other overseas sources.

Longtime toy safety advocate David Pittle, a CPSC commissioner, says that cracking down on foreign makers is more difficult than on companies with plants which inspectors periodically check here at home. Thus, CPSC personnel have to rely largely on their "shelf inspections" of imports — examining them after they are in the store and perhaps after many children are already playing with them.

"Of course," more inspectors would help eliminate some of the bad apples, Mr. Pittle adds. On the other hand, he asserts that "there has been significant progress made in the safety area" over the past several years. "But that doesn't mean that we do not have some distance to go yet," he admits.

Specifically, CPSC regulations promulgated in the past few years have helped eliminate points and sharp edges from many toys which resulted in hundreds, if not thousands, of injuries. At present, the CPSC is studying intensely how much regulation there should be for so-called "projectile toys."

When referring to projectile toys, Mr. Pittle means dart guns and others which use "stored energy" such as a spring, rather than objects like balls that are thrown by hand. The major problem with finding out how many injuries children suffer from mechanical toys is that, to date, statistics have been reported in the context of overly broad categories. Thus, the injuries incurred from projectile toys, for instance, are not broken down between those caused by projectiles which are hand powered and those sent into the air by springs or catapults.

Nationwide, there are some 150,000 different varieties of toys on the market today, with 5,000 new ones flooding hobby shops, department stores, supermarkets, and other outlets every year.

Regulations promulgated by the CPSC are aimed at general characteristics of toys, such as sharp edges, rather than dealing with whether or not any one toy manufactured by a particular company is unsafe.

Nevertheless, the objective of the general standards, says Elaine Benson, a toy safety expert with the CPSC, is to "remove the schlock" toys — the ones that are defective in regard to safety.

Currently, while foreign imported toys "may be the main problem" as far as toy safety in general is concerned, objective standards for all toys eventually will weed out ones that are not fashioned to the standards, Mrs. Benson says.

Another area the CPSC is seriously studying, with a view to setting new regulations, is the role that brittle plastic plays in child injuries. Some toy manufacturers have switched to using "soft" plastics, the kind that bend, to avert injuries.

College graduation does not always insure a fulfilling career

By Deborah Hand

College graduation isn't an automatic launching pad for a fulfilling career. Many people spend years zigzagging in the job market before finding a satisfying field. According to career experts, the average worker under 35 years old job hunts once every 1 1/2 years.

Jim Brown, Robin Mullis, and Larry Marinozzi are three people who didn't find that special niche until they were nearly 30. But for each, the years of trial and error made the final career discovery all the more fulfilling.

Jim, a set and prop designer in Seattle, advises career-minded young people, "Get in touch with your true feelings. Use every possible avenue to find out what you really want to do, and do it at all cost. If you have something you really want to do, and you know you can do it and there's a market, don't let anything dissuade you."

Jim speaks from experience. "I let my college counselor talk me out of drama 10 years ago because he said I would never get a job. He told me to major in English because 'you can always get a teaching job.' He didn't know anything about working in a profession other than teaching. Actually, there's a huge demand for prop people, and very few who do it well."

Jim did get his BA in English, then went on for a master's in American studies so he could teach at the college level. "When I started my MA in 1969, community colleges were desperate for teachers," he says. "When I finished two years later, there were no jobs at all."

Jim was a social worker for five years in Los Angeles, then a court administrator in Aberdeen, Washington, for three.

In Aberdeen, he joined a local community theater group. His love for theater was rekindled so much that he returned to school for his master of fine arts degree in scenic design from the University of Washington. He would like eventually to teach scenic design at the college level, but meanwhile is working for various Seattle theaters.

While he doesn't regret his years spent in other jobs because "I've learned a lot," he says. "If I had gone this direction 10 years ago I would be well established in my field by now."

His advice: "You have to find out for yourself if there's a market. Don't rely on a counselor. And if you feel you just have to do a thing to be happy, you're probably right."

Robin Mullis, a landscape designer in Kirkland, Washington, trained specifically for her career at the University of Washington.

But she didn't get established in the field until well after graduation. "I was tired of the intensity of school," she says, "and what I learned in college was not enough to get the kind of job they told me I could get. It was all theoretical. It prepared me to be a designer, but you have to start with a company as a draftsman, and I didn't have the technical training."

She also wanted to do residential designing rather than the larger-scale park and regional work on which the school curriculum was based.

For a year she stayed out of the field altogether, designing jewelry and selling it in fairs. "I didn't even landscape my own home," she says. Then, she worked in a nursery and took some technical classes at the local community college.

Finally, she jumped back into the landscape field, forming her own business as a teacher and consultant on residential landscaping rather than joining an established firm. "I now have as much work as I want to accept," she says.

Robin was the only woman in the landscape school, and her college advisers tried to discourage her from pioneering in a "man's field." But as it turned out, she is one of the few members of her classmates who owns a Chinese restaurant, she says, and another works for the utility company.

Unlike Robin and Jim, Larry had no idea what he wanted to do when he graduated from the University of Delaware with a bachelor's degree in philosophy. It took him six years to find out.

He did a variety of jobs. He sold shoes and records. He painted apartments. And he was a chemical technician, a land surveyor, and an electrician. But nothing seemed to "fit."

Then, while clerking in an accounting firm in Massachusetts, he learned a little about computers and thought he might like programming. He heard through a friend that the state was looking for people to train in the field. He applied and was accepted.

For the last two years he has worked for the Massachusetts Bureau of Systems and Operations in Boston, and he says that he likes it.

He says, "If anyone had told me when I was in college that I would become a computer programmer, I would have said, 'You're crazy!' But programming is actually a natural field for a philosophy major because both are based on logic. When I was in college, though, it was still new, and not something I thought about at all."

Larry's method of finding a career was, "If I thought I would like something, I tried it. I kept trying things until I found what I liked."

"And I like where I am now. I finally like my job."

Russian women show immense change in the role of women

By David K. Willis

Her father was a nomadic shepherd in a land of Islam. She was one of six children. Today, trim, graying Bibina Oruzbayeva holds a doctorate in philology (language) and is chief editor of the Kirghiz national encyclopedia. Her deputy is a man. Smiling, gentle Manura Akhmetova was born in a Kazakh village, also one of six children. From a rural school, she went on to specialize in teaching Russian in Kazakh schools. Still young, she has shot upward to the post of deputy minister of education in Alma-Ata, supervising about 3 million children in more than 9,000 secondary schools. Her traditional Tadjik red silk dress, worn over long, narrow trousers shot through with purple, green, and black, belies 22-year-old Oybihi Holova's status as a senior economist on her 17,000-acre state farm (cotton, cattle, fruit) just outside the city of Dushanbe.

Daughter of a rural silk weaver, Amangul Berdiniyazova wears her black hair pulled back into a bun, as she sits beneath a portrait of Lenin in her office in Ashkhabad, Soviet Turkmenia. She is a deputy mayor of the city, in charge not only of women's affairs, but also of public health, culture, sport, trade, and social security.

These four symbolize the immense changes in the role of women in Soviet central Asia since 1917. Sixty-two years of communist rule have raised material living standards in the larger cities, broken down many of the old Islamic ways, and emancipated women to a far greater degree than is the case across the border in Iran and Afghanistan.

No Islamic revival threatens the hold of the Communist Party or the march of modern technology, as it does in Iran, just 50 miles south of Ashkhabad. No civil war engulfs society here as it does in Afghanistan, just across the spectacular snow-tipped mountains from Dushanbe in Tadjikistan.

Each of the four women has emerged from a semifeudal past to a modern world of schools, cars, apartments, electricity — and virtual equality with men. The story is one of Moscow's proudest claims.

The women talked to this correspondent after he had asked party authorities in four cities — Frunze, Alma-Ata, Dushanbe, and Ashkhabad — for general assistance in looking into women's roles and status.

They are genuine success stories. There are many others. Our guide in Alma-Ata, for instance, was a young woman who has already led a group of Soviet tourists abroad on a visit to Cyprus, Turkey, Egypt, and Greece. Young Rahima Hafizova is head of the Young Communist League at the Dushanbe state farm.

Chattering women, many of them from the same families, make traditional "tyubeteikas" (embroidered caps) in an airy workshop in Dushanbe and weave wonderful woolen carpets in an Ashkhabad factory, where speakers blare traditional music at one end and "Boney M" rock at the other.

Yet the changes have brought tensions and problems as well. Officials don't talk about them much to Westerners. But they are clear in the local press, and they can be seen and sensed by the outside visitor.

Clearly, women are much more bound by male-dominated Islamic traditions in the smaller settlements in the mountains and in the bleak desert regions of the interior of the Central Asian republics.

Party officials regularly attack such practices as jinaza (traditional funeral services), nika (traditional weddings), and kalym ("bride price," the goods demanded by the bride's family in return for its consent for her to marry).

In a slashing speech last July 20 in Ashkhabad, the party chief of Turkmenia, M.G. Gapurov, said:

"Despite the intensified struggle against kalym, the majority of instances of it remain hidden. The proponents...have become cleverer and more refined — now they mostly take cash.

"Basically it is greed and not tradition (as some consider) that makes kalym one of the most tenacious survivals of the past."

Mr. Gapurov lambasted his own party members for indifference to two other vestiges of Muslim ways — girls marrying at 14 and 15, and bigamy.

Asked about this, the deputy mayor, Mrs. Berdiniyazova said: "In the countryside, there are maybe some cases of the bride price. These people are not well educated. We have to conduct more propaganda against it. We tell families that if they want to give a present to the bride's family, don't make it money, make it furniture, or buy a ring or some earrings.

In the cities, life is changing. More and more girls make their own decisions about whom to marry."

In Dushanbe, Tadjikistan, old traditions linger. We watched a traditional wedding party dance in the street. The bride was downcast, her head swathed in a white veil. Later, we were told, the bride would sit in her new husband's home for 40 days receiving well wishers. Each day she would wear a different dress — 20 given by her own family; 20 by the groom's.

The stress is on the bride's subservience to her husband's family. Some say it's just a custom, but others insist men still dominate in the home.

In Alma-Ata, it is still very much the custom for the wife to live with her husband's parents, not the other way around. In a number of cities, women come in from the countryside to marry. Although they have jobs and salaries, they are definitely expected to stay in the background. Efforts at free social lives cause great displeasure among older relatives.

Given the perennial Soviet housing shortage, couples tend to live with parents and grandparents, and family life is often split by tensions between the generations.

In the rural areas, electricity has brought television and refrigerators — but Islam persists in thought and daily life. Women have many more children — six are by no means uncommon — than in the rest of the country. Despite the help of relatives and state benefits, mothers often must stay home rather than keeping their jobs and their incomes.

However, many women do work. The majority seem to take up the same professions that women do in other areas of the country: doctors, nurses, teachers. Some 90 percent of Ashkhabad health clinics are headed by women; 73 percent of Kazakhstan's 200,000 school teachers are women.

Relatively few women are ministers or top party officials (just as there are relatively few in Moscow), though many women are selected by the party for nomination (and certain election) to the Supreme Soviets, or government councils of their own republics and of the USSR as a whole.

What is 4-H?

4-H! What does that term mean to you? Animals? The County Fair? The 4-H club is an American invention that originated in 1914 from the same act that established the Cooperative Extension Service (an entity of the U.S. Department of Agriculture). The close affiliation between the school and home at that time made it possible for adult members of the family to adopt new practices as a result of 4-H learned experiences.

4-H has an even greater role in today's society because it helps young people in both urban and rural communities become self-directing, and productive individuals. The 4-H program, with 5.4 million members is the largest youth organization in the nation. Because 4-H has so much to offer young people, in addition to the traditional 4-H club, today it is incorporated into cities through schools, libraries, church groups, and youth organizations.

4-H is such a broad organization that it encompasses many other project areas other than agriculture. For example, it includes — home economics, photography, crafts, automobile care, community service, veterinary science and many others. 4-H welcomes all youth regardless of ethnic, cultural, or socio-economic background.

Job tax credits offered

Massachusetts employers can cut the amount of federal taxes they pay by hiring certain workers, according to Secretary of Labor Ray Marshall.

A telephone call to the nearest local office of the Massachusetts Job Matching Service is all it takes to learn about jobs tax credits and get referrals of eligible jobseekers.

There are two tax credits:

— The Target Jobs Tax Credit (TJTC) applies to wages paid by taxpayers to employees between Jan. 1, 1979, and Dec. 31, 1980, to certified employees hired from seven categories of jobseekers after Sept. 26, 1978. The credit is 50 percent of first-year wages up to $6,000 and 25 percent of second-year wages up to $3,000 for each eligible employee.

The seven targeted groups are:

1. Recipients of Supplemental Security Income (SSI) payments.
2. Handicapped individuals referred from state vocational rehabilitation agencies and the Veterans Administration.
3. Youth, 18 through 24, in economically disadvantaged families, i.e., if income for the 6 months preceding the hiring date, annualized, is less than 70 percent of the Bureau of Labor Statistics lower living standard.
4. Vietnam-era veterans under 35 who are economically disadvantaged.
5. Recipients of general assistance payments (state or locally financed welfare) for 30 or more days.
6. Youth, 16 through 18, participating in an approved cooperative education program, and
7. Ex-convicts (convicted of a felony) who are economically disadvantaged and hired within 5 years of release from prison or date of conviction, whichever is later.

— The Work Incentive (WIN)—Welfare Tax Credit is for employers who hire participants in the Work Incentive (WIN) program or recipients of Aid to Families with Dependent Children. More information on hiring these workers and claiming the WIN—Welfare Tax Credit can be obtained from local Job Matching Service offices, or from local WIN or Welfare offices.

Tax credits are administered by the U.S. Department of Labor's Employment and Training Administration, in cooperation with the Internal Revenue Service, and with various other Federal agencies serving members of the targeted groups.

If for any reason employers cannot reach a local Job Service office or need additional information about the Targeted Jobs or WIN-Welfare Tax Credits, they may call: 1-800-322-6200 for Massachusetts Job Matching Service tax credit information or 1-800-322-5194 (toll-free), the national jobs tax credit hotline.

Hard to get Mistletoe

It's a well-known fact that you don't stand under the mistletoe if you're playing hard to get. The little-known fact is that mistletoe itself is hard to get. According to the December Reader's Digest, it grows high up on deciduous trees — those that lose their leaves in autumn — and harvesters collect it either by spearing it with long fork-topped sticks or shooting it down with rifles or bow and arrow.

"Da"

By RICK PEARL

A play such as "Da", which saw its Boston engagement close November 17 at the Colonial Theatre, doesn't receive a Tony Award, nor a Drama Desk Award, nor an Outer Critics Circle Award for Best Play, for nothing. Nor, may it be pointed out, does an actor like Barnard Hughes win a Tony as the Best Actor for his portrayal of the main character, for nothing.

And the touring company of "Da" that played before packed audiences for two weeks here did nothing to disclaim the fact that what they have here is one of the most charming and "irresistible" comedies of the past year.

Written by Hugh Leonard and directed by Tony Award-winning Melvin Bernhardt, "Da" is the story of an old Irish man's ghost who pops up to haunt, charm, and make peace with his adopted son, Charlie, the day of his funeral.

Hughes, as "Da", immediately wins over his audience with his stubborn, gentle, witty, foolish and wise character. Anyone who has had a "da" in his or her family can easily relate to Hughes' jokes, mannerisms, and "white lies".

Charlie Now, played by Tom Crawley, conjures up memories of his father and mother, as well as scenes from his own past, upon entering his old house, that should prove familiar to all.

As Charlie Now sits back at the kitchen table and watches, he sees himself being recruited for a job by the Scrooge-like Drumm (John Wylie was excellent in this part), while his Da and stepmother inadvertently make things worse for him with their cajoling and "ignorance", as Drumm calls it.

There are other scenes, all adequately done by John Didrichsen as Charlie Then, that Charlie Now looks back on scoffingly, convinced that his Da was holding him back, and yet just as convinced that he loved the foolish old man.

Crawley's performance is overshadowed only by Hughes'; he continually lets the warm side of his character shine through the outer brusqueness he puts on while burning his step-father's old moments.

Helen Stenborg, Hughes' actual wife, plays a convincing mother who is watchful of Charlie and yet can't help but to tell everyone that he is adopted and that someone once told her that he'd grow up to be more trouble than he was worth.

The play is sometimes light, sometimes serious, always warm, and the acting is brilliant. Hughes' Da leaves you with the hope that he tags after you for the rest of your life, just as he is destined to tag after Charlie.

THEATRE REVIEW

The story of an Irish ghost is light and amusing

If you have the chance to see this play in the future, whether it be on a return engagement in Boston, or while you're traveling, make sure you do so. It is guaranteed to leave you "stepping lively" once you leave the theatre.

Creative Arts for Kids recently held its Annual Fall Theatre Night at the Quannapowitt Playhouse. They were entertained with a special production by the Quannapowitt Players, and by Larry Baione on jazz guitar and Randy Sabien on jazz violin. Both men are on the faculty of the Berklee School of Music and Larry Baione is frequently heard at St. Agnes Church on Sunday mornings.

Yankee Division goes bridge building

101st Engineer Battalion, 26th (YANKEE) Infantry Division, moved some Lowell housewives closer to the grocery store last month.

The store was just a few yards down the street but the closing of a DPW bridge across the Pearl Street railroad cut forced residents to travel miles to get there.

On a chilly late October weekend, more than 75 citizen soldiers of Chelsea's Company B, 101st Engineers, with help from the battalion's Headquarters Company, turned out to rebuild Pearl Street's bridge.

The new bridge, a temporary span similar to types the engineers might be called to build during wartime, will permit two way car and truck traffic across the railroad tracks. According to 1st Lt. Wayne Wheeler of Sharon, the company commander, the state Department of Public Works plans to replace the temporary bridge with a permanent span within five years.

Surveying their weekend's handiwork, Staff Sgt. Walter Wiechec of Chelsea, the senior enlisted citizen soldier on the site, remarked, "It's a sweet bridge and great training for the outfit. It feels good to do a good job that helps people."

Staff Sgt. Walter Wiechec of Chelsea, a platoon sergeant in Company B, 101st Engineer Battalion, 26th (Yankee) Infantry Division, wrestles a support into place as the Chelsea citizen soldiers rebuild a condemned bridge on Lowell's Pearl Street. When not serving with the Mass. Army National Guard, Wiechec is a welder for the Fred W. Johnson Company.

The Suburbs upgrade racial programs

By Laix Overbea

A number of Boston suburbs — Concord, Wellesley, and Brookline among them — are rethinking the effectiveness of their programs for a better racial atmosphere in the wake of recent incidents in their schools.

The incidents ranged from racist graffiti on walls in one school to the closing of Wellesley High School for three days after a major free-for-all fist fight involving black and white students.

"I never thought we had serious problems in race relations here," says Jason Korrell, a 22-year resident of Concord, retired newspaper editor, and chairman of the Concord Interchurch Committee on Social Concerns. "But incidents have cropped up here and there. We are not as perfect as we thought."

Concord — Mr. Korrell calls it a "decent, well-educated community" — is involved in its second year of a "Climate for Freedom" project which resulted in the recent formation of the Concord-Carlisle Human Rights Council.

The Freedom program was Concord's answer to its racial crisis in June, 1978, when 36 black students of the Concord-Carlisle High School declared they would not return to that school in September. Community and school efforts persuaded most to return.

"People are getting along better with people of other races," says Lee Pierce, the new superintendent of Concord-Carlisle schools. "We are not getting a severe rub-off of racial tension from Boston. I would say Climate for Freedom has done much to ease our uneasiness."

Fewer than one percent of Concord's residents represent minorities, including blacks, Asians, American Indians, and others, says the affirmative action and fair housing committee of Climate for Freedom.

"Few middle income and no lower income people can afford to buy a home in Concord today," the committee reports, adding that during 1979, only six houses have been sold at $25,000 and the next lowest price was $45,000.

James Robinson, who heads the affirmative action committee, says the main issue is "whether we can convince minorities that meaningful job opportunities exist for them with major employers in or near Concord." Affirmative action plans are plentiful in housing, education, and employment, he says, "but blacks feel uncomfortable with us."

Ruth Salinger, chairperson of the Human Rights Council, says, "Last year we began to work together from a sense of urgency, but this year we must confront ourselves and our neighbors with one thought — human rights should be the major mission of our community."

Many residents have signed a Climate for Freedom "Statement of Human Rights," pledging themselves "to live and work toward the spirit of neighborliness upon which our communities were first founded."

There is no panacea for implementing human rights, says Mary Jane McGlenon, convener of Climate for Freedom. "Our test will be to turn papers, reports, and words into action," she says.

Brookline, Wellesley, and other suburbs which are charter members of METCO — a volunteer desegregation program which buses 3,000 black children from inner city Boston to 38 affluent suburban schools — are seeking new ways to create an "atmosphere of understanding."

Recent outbreaks in their communities contrast sharply with past tradition.

Fifteen years ago, Wellesley parents and children participated in "freedom schools" in Boston, when black students of the Hub boycotted "unequal" public schools in their communities. Twelve years ago Brookline voters rejected school committee candidates who campaigned against the then new METCO program.

Racial graffiti, "turf" (who is allowed to be where), and isolation have caused problems in Brookline High School for the past two years. A School Climate Improvement Project announced Nov. 1, established three teams — school governance and school activities, school and racial climates, and school-community relations — with four teachers, two students, and two administrators working on each team.

Headmaster Carmen Rinaldi, parents, and community leaders work with the teams to develop a multicultural program for the high school, including a series of seminars highlighted by a Human Relations Day on Dec. 14; long-range "action" plans; and intergroup racial and ethnic projects.

The project was developed by Supt. Robert I. Sperber with consultants from TDR Associates, Inc. of Newton.

"Brookline is fortunate to act before the situation is polarized," says Ronald Gibson, a student counselor working with the new program. "We cannot isolate ourselves from incidents in Boston, although we believe there is no direct tie here."

Teamwork is reducing tensions, says Gretchen Underwood, Brookline METCO coordinator, though there will be no "huge, splashy payoff."

Wellesley, a town said to house only eight black families, was shocked Sept. 27, when an all-out racial battle forced Wellesley High School to close for three days. This was just one day before Boston's racial calm was upset with the shooting of a black football player in Charlestown.

Timothy Connors, principal of Wellesley High School, has installed a program involving faculty, students, and METCO. It will hold workshops and meetings, bring black people to talk to students and faculty, and enlist ministers and community leaders to bring about "sensitivity and awareness."

Black role models are needed in Wellesley, says Michelle Foster, METCO coordinator. More black teachers (there are only five, including only one in the high school as a coach) are needed in the school system, "especially in high school," she says.

Boston black students "perish" in the relaxed life-style and discipline of Wellesley, she adds. She praises a "Wall of Respect" art department project which illustrates black achievement.

Navy offers medical scholarships

The Department of the Navy is now accepting applications for Medical or Osteopathic School scholarships which will begin July 1, 1980.

According to Captain A.C. Eastman, commanding officer of Navy Recruiting District (NRD) Boston, these scholarships are available to students who have been accepted to an American Medical Association or American Osteopathic Association-accredited school, or students already enrolled in such a school.

"Because only a limited number of scholarships exist in 1980," Capt. Eastman said, "this scholarship program is highly competitive."

The Navy scholarship includes four full years of tuition, reimbursement of required books and supplies, a monthly stipend for 10 months and a commission as a Naval Reserve officer.

Students interested in this scholarship should contact NRD Boston's Medical Programs Department at 470 Atlantic Ave., Boston, or call 223-6216.

THIS WEEK'S CHUCKLE

Two shoe salesmen went to Africa to open up new territories. Three days after their arrival the first salesman sent a cable: "Returning on next plane. Can't sell shoes here, everybody goes barefoot."

Nothing was heard from the second salesman for about two weeks. Then came a fat airmail envelope with this message for the home office: "Fifty orders enclosed. Prospects unlimited. Nobody here has shoes."

On foreign children Impact of television

By Sara Hoagland Hunter

Children's television has been the subject of endless bickering and theorizing in the United States. But while Americans have been watching the effects of television on their own children, the effects of American TV on children around the world may have gone unnoticed.

In a recent international symposium, it was apparent that many of the world's children shape their views of America through programs such as "Kojak," a series about a New York City detective.

During the month-long symposium called "Books and Broadcasting for Children," media experts from 30 foreign countries toured US facilities and discussed the impact of the media in children. American imported television was often a subject of conversation.

For example, one spokesman from Romania stated that babies in his country were now being christened "Kojak" after the tough, bald detective on television.

In Sweden, the government allows only the mildest of the "Kojak" episodes to be broadcast, but parents complain the show still contains too much violence.

Krystyna Stefanska, editor in chief of the Polish children's film department, says many Polish people watch "Kojak" to see what America is like. On her first trip to the U.S., she says, "Many of my ideas of places and problems in the U.S. are from Kojak...not from the silly plots, but from watching the backgrounds."

Even "Sesame Street" hasn't had an overwhelmingly positive impact abroad. Brazilian children's host Daniel Azulay, says "Sesame Street" didn't work in Brazil because the education of preschoolers is so indigenous to a particular culture. "It's hard enough for a teacher to teach in a foreign country, let alone a television, which is even further removed."

Anna Home, executive producer of the British Broadcasting Corporation's children's drama department says that BBC has its own education department to produce children's educational television. Although they do import some American cartoons and a few of ABC's after-school specials, Miss Home says, "We would prefer to import as little as possible unless it's a very high quality, and most of the American programming isn't."

In Kenya, "Mork and Mindy" and "The Waltons" are popular, but so are Kenyan programs in which African storytellers repeat legends that have been passed down for centuries. The contrasts between these programs are staggering.

Many participants expressed admiration for America's technological advancements and production capabilities. Krystyna Stefanska would like to produce a Polish version of PBS's "Zoom," which she viewed for the first time when she was in the U.S. Charity Waichungo of Kenya learned new production techniques.

Cecily Truett, the symposium's co-director, says the symposium was "an opportunity to foster international cooperation during the international Year of the Child." If Americans became more aware of the worldwide impact of American television, then this conference has made at least a step toward this kind of international cooperation.

Easier to receive SSI

New rules now in effect should make it easier for people to qualify for supplemental security income (SSI) payments than in the past, Elizabeth McGuigan, social security district manager in Cambridge, said recently.

SSI makes payments to people 65 and over, or disabled, or blind, with limited income and resources.

The new rules: Increase the allowed value of a car.

Change the way the value of resources is figured to take account of any money owed. Permit more household goods to be owned.

Before, a car valued at $1,200 or less did not count as a resource. Now, a car valued at $4,500 or less will not count at all. Any excess value counts as a resource.

In the past, all resources were figured at their fair market value and any money owed was not taken into account. Now, money owed on a resource will be deducted when the value is figured, except for a car.

Before, household goods and personal property valued at $1,500 or less did not count. Now, the limit has been raised to $2,000. Any excess value counts as a resource.

The new rules did not change the basic requirements for SSI payments, E. McGuigan said. As before, an individual can get SSI only if he or she has resources that count valued at $1,500 or less. The limit for a couple is $2,250.

More information about SSI can be obtained at the Cambridge social security office, located at 625 Mt. Auburn Street.

Annually Boston Symphony Orchestra $14 million business

"This is a 14 million-dollar-a-year business," general manager Thomas W. Morris explained. "Our big difference from other businesses is that we are not out to maximize profits. Our prime objective is to maximize the quality of what we produce, and our second objectives is to finance that."

Mr. Morris is the top business executive of the world-famous Boston Symphony Orchestra. Its product, of course, is music — or the training of musicians.

In a sense, the Boston Symphony is a conglomerate. Its numerous activities give it the highest income of any symphony orchestra in the nation.

"We are into everything," Mr. Morris exaggerated, referring to the orchestra's extra revenues from recording, television, radio, a gift shop, program advertising, hall rental, tuition at its Berkshire Music Center, and the food-and-drink concession at the Boston Pops concerts.

"Indeed," he jokes, "we are the only orchestra in the world that owns a seven-gang lawn mower." The power mower is used on the lawn at the orchestra's 300-acre facility at Tanglewood, in western Massachusetts, where each summer the orchestra performs as part of what it bills as "the world's greatest arts festivals."

What's more, the orchestra could rank as a growth firm. Its "earned income" from ticket sales, concert grants, tuition, refreshments, and so on has risen from $5.7 million in 1974-75 to $10.7 million in the 1978-79 season. In the same time span, endowment income has grown at a slower pace, from $898,000 to $1,079,000.

Mr. Morris says, "Like any growing organization, we have to be more businesslike, more efficient."

In fact, as is the case for many if not most of the nation's major artistic groups, the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been introducing more and more modern business management techniques to its operations. Two years ago it became the first symphony orchestra in the nation to acquire its own computer, a Wang model. It uses the machine for bookkeeping and budgeting. Financial forecasts are prepared for three years into the future.

Mr. Hill, who was an executive in the electronics industry for 25 years, has a master's in business administration from Harvard University. He is also one of the nation's leading experts on zero-base budgeting.

Mr. Morris has an MBA from the Wharton School at the University of Pennsylvania.

The orchestra's management structure includes a board of trustees at the top. Reporting to it directly are Mr. Morris and music director Seiji Ozawa.

"These two," explained Peter Gelb, assistant manager, "are supposed to balance each other out. You are supposed to have an ongoing, friendly conflict between the artistic and the administrative side."

Apparently the emphasis must be on "friendly." Says Mr. Morris: "Ozawa and I are very active partners in all decisions."

There is no doubt financial factors do affect the artistic side. For instance, when the orchestra goes on tour, as it has in the last few years to China, Austria, and Japan, all the costs plus a pro rata contribution to the entire orchestra's overhead must be covered by the sponsors.

When Mr. Ozawa plans the season's programs, he must work within a budget. That means he likely will choose a mix of expensive and less-costly guest artists. He may schedule only perhaps two major, more difficult works per season, which might involve extra rehearsal time, an expanded orchestra, a chorus, soloists, singers, and other additional costs.

The members of the orchestra, whom Mr. Morris describes as "the 100 best musicians in the world," are nowadays well paid. The minimum salary of the unionized musicians is $25,000, the median about $35,000, and a few receive considerably more. Timpani player Everett Firth often arrives at Symphony Hall in a Rolls-Royce Phantom Cloud. Regarded as the top timpani player in the world, he has a business on the side, Vic Sticks, which sells sticks for percussionists.

The players work hard for their money. The orchestra has a heavy schedule of concerts in Boston in the fall and winter. There are also concerts by the Boston Pops, which includes all but about 15 Boston Symphony players, in May, June, and July. Then the BSO moves to Tanglewood for the summer and a substitute group of players is hired to form the Boston Pops Esplanade Orchestra.

The orchestra also has the cost of maintaining its hall here in Boston and the facility at Tanglewood. But Mr. Morris is proud that the "fixed costs" of the orchestra have been rising in recent years at only about a 7 percent annual rate — less than inflation.

The orchestra has managed to boost its "margins" (something like profit margins) on its activities in recent years from 41 percent of fixed costs in 1970-71 to 55 percent in 1978-79. Nonetheless, the deficit is also growing and the managers are sounding the alarm on a need for more "unearned money." For its first 40 years, until 1921, the orchestra's founder, Maj. Henry Lee Higginson, covered the deficit from his own pocket. Today the orchestra is scrambling to cover its $3 million deficit, with a campaign for an extra $15.7 million in endowment money by its 100th anniversary, in 1981 ($11 million pledged so far), and a higher return on its annual fund drive.

Don't 'gun' stuck car

Motorists who get stuck this winter in ice, mud or snow should not attempt to free the vehicle by "gunning" the engine. This could cause a spinning tire to rupture with explosive force, warns The Firestone Tire & Rubber Company.

"This puts stresses on the rotating tire that it is not intended to take and the tire could fail explosively," said John D. Kelley, director of tire development for Firestone.

He pointed out that any tire on the drive axle of a vehicle equipped with a differential in the axle (as is the case in practically all cars and trucks) "is potentially exposed to this situation that could cause the tire to explode."

"If one drive wheel tire becomes stuck and the other is free to turn on a slippery surface," Kelley continued, "the differential transmits all of the power to the drive wheel tire that is rotating, thus doubling the speed of the rotating tire."

Kelley advises motorists not to gun their engines when stuck but to rock their vehicles by shifting from forward to reverse and back again at low speeds.

"If this does not free you, seek help from service station or garage personnel. They have the knowledge and the equipment to free your vehicle without damaging the tire or vehicle," Kelley concluded.

The stage, the music and the holidays

Coming Attractions

by William J. Fazio

COMING ATTRACTIONS must drag you kicking and screaming into the Christmas season, but the push-push of the holidays can be cushioned somewhat by the plethora of theater and music diversions available to one and all in the first and coming weeks of December. There is a lot of creativity flowing during this season, which explains the number of grand displays. Another phenomenon of Christmas is that people are home and willing to spend some money. Sample these local and Boston entertainment delights.

MUSIC: They are not the Vienna Choir of world-wide fame, but the Lexington Boys Choir will present a Christmas Concert and Carol Sing at the First Parish Church on Lexington Green, on Dec. 14. The choir will also be heard in a joint concert with the Braintree Choral Society on December 9 at All Souls Church, Braintree and December 16 at Pyson Park Church in Belmont, both at 4 P.M. The Union Congregational Church of North Reading will be presenting Handel's "Messiah" on Sunday evening, Dec. 16th at 7 P.M. The Chancel choir and other local residents will make up the concert choir of 40 talented singers and musicians. Not to overshadow the North Reading production, but the Handel and Hayden Society in its 16th Season, will present Handel's "Messiah" at Symphony Hall, December 7 and 8. Guaranteed inspiration and joy in the season at either site. Inspirational, but not religious is the appearance of Al Martino at the Chateau de Ville in Framingham Dec. 17-19 and in Saugus Dec. 20-22. The New England Conservatory Chorus and Chamber Singers, directed by Lorna Cooke deVaron, will present a Christmas offering on Wednesday, December 12, at 8 P.M. in Jordan Hall in Boston. The holiday program will include Vivaldi's "Credo", Charpentier's "Christmas Cantata", Beethoven's "Wachet auf", Liszt's "Die Seligkeiten", and excerpts for Rachmaninoff's "Vespers". Bomp, bomp, bomp, bomp. The Sweet Adeline Chorus needs five more singers with bass voices. Tryouts are every Monday night from 7:30 P.M. on at the Liberty Belle Chapter's Rehearsal Nite at the Congregational Church on Pleasant Street in Arlington.

THEATER: "The Time of Your Life", set in Nick's Saloon in San Francisco and filled with a cast of colorful characters, this Pulitzer-Prize-winning play by William Saroyan has been called the quintessential American comedy. The Boston Shakespeare Company performs the comedy as its non-Shakespearean offering this season. Performances are at 8 P.M. on varying Wednesday-Saturday dates through February 8th. Through December 15th, The Reality Theater at 26 Overland Street, near Kenmore Square in Boston, is premiering the "Water Engine", a play by David Mamet about the invention of the century and the search for an honest man. Georges Feydeau is displayed at Brandeis's Spingold Theater through "A Flea in Her Ear", a French comedy with a new translation by Arthur Chiasson on December 5-8, 14 and 15 at 8 P.M. December 9 at 7 P.M., December 12 and 13, at 10 A.M. All seats reserved. Boston's own Pocket Mime Theatre, Artists in Residence at Northeastern University, will present an exclusive two-week series of performances in the University's Studio Theatre December 5 through 8 and December 13 through 14. Performances are at 8 P.M.

The troupe will perform material from its repertoire as well as new mime pieces created and developed in open rehearsals at Northeastern. Those rehearsals, which are open to the public, have already begun and offer interested persons an opportunity to see "mime in the making." Locally the selection is the equal of the Boston shows. Our Lady of Nazareth Academy, Wakefield, will present "Scrooge" and other Christmas musical selections on Friday, December 7th in the auditorium of the Emilliana Arts and Science Center on the Academy grounds. Members of the cast for the Academy presentation of "Scrooge" are: Scrooge — Susan Ventura of Wakefield, Cratchit — Mary Vanderbuilt of Winchester, Topper — Robin Hinton of Tewksbury, Emily — Liza Pizzano of Reading, Fred — Laurel LoPresti of Andover, Polly — Rosemary Flynn of Melrose. Other members of the cast are also from the student body.

THE ARTS: "The Most Celebrated Dance Company in the world", the Martha Graham Dance Company will bring new life to the revitalized Stand Theatre located at 543 Columbia Road in Dorchester. As the city of Boston keeps rising Phoenix-like, so does certain centers for the arts. The Strand is returning.

MOVIES: In the category of "the past returns", an item that could be interpreted either as a pleasure or a nightmare has surfaced. The movie "Animal House", starring John Belushi has reappeared for a second profitable run at local cinemas. A funny movie, not very respectful of a lot of rules or precedents, but the leer on Belushi's face as he cratches the women's sorority is worth the price of admission.

OTHER: The Ipswich River Watershed Association has received a grant from the Blanchard Foundation of Boston for 80 hours of architectural planning time for river front design. IRWA President Larry Morse of Ipswich has been conferring with Kevin Paicos, North Reading Selectman and IRWA Vice President, and Ray Farnsworth, Middleton Conservation Commission Chairman about possible locations for the project. A landowner will be furnished with completed plans in exchange for a commitment to put into effect the river front design project. Recreation in the Upper Ipswich River basin comprised of Burlington, Wilmington, North Reading, Reading, Andover, North Andover, Peabody, Lynnfield and Middleton will be improved. What is the fastest growing hobby in America? It might very well be miniatures, the making and collecting of doll houses and every type of furnishing to go inside. Although doll houses date back to the Middle Ages, and were especially popular in the 1800's, in this century they have generally been considered as toys, and nothing more. During the past decade, however, there has been a dramatic increase in interest in doll houses, and a proliferation of new books, magazines, organizations, shops, and shows for the men and women of all ages who have become involved in the world of miniatures. A special exhibit at the Wenham Museum, "Doll's Houses — Old and New," will run from December 2nd through Jan. 31, showing examples of doll house craftsmanship from the past and present. The Wenham Museum is located at 132 Main Street (Rt. 1A) in the center of Wenham.

The Season begins of Christmas giving, of appreciation of your fellow persons, of the need of others of your guidance and charity. Don't forget needy COMING ATTRACTIONS, tell what you are doing, care of your local newspaper.
